

CONTENTS

	page
List of Abbreviations	XI
I. General introduction
1. Setting the scene	1
1.1. Privatization and liberalization of water services in the wake of water commoditization	4
1.2. Emergence of a human rights-based approach to water	12
1.3. Possible conflicting obligations arising from the human right to water and international economic law	15
2. Rationale for the book: a quest for balancing the human rights approach and the trade and investment law approach to water services liberalization	16
3. Area of research: fragmentation of international law	19
4. Research questions	20
5. Model of analysis	21
5.1. Harmonization by means of conflict prevention	22
5.2. Harmonization by means of interpretation	23
5.3. Establishing systemic relationships of priority	28
6. Methodology	36
7. Scope and outline of the book	37
II. The Human Right to Water under International Law
1. Introduction	41
2. The legal basis of the human right to water	47
2.1. Treaty legal basis	47
2.1.1. The right to water as a derivative right	51
2.2. The emergence of a customary human right to water	53
2.2.1. State practice	60
2.2.1.1. International treaties	61
2.2.1.2. Regional instruments	63
2.2.1.3. Statements by States and conduct within international organizations	66
2.2.1.4. National constitutions and legislation	68
2.2.1.5. Domestic case law	73
2.2.2. States' opinio juris	82
2.2.3. A right in statu nascendi or already born?	85

	page
2.3. General principles of international law	88
3. The content of the human right to water	89
3.1. The content of the right to water derived from Article 11 ICESCR	89
3.1.1. Subsequent agreement on the interpretation of Article 11 ICESCR	93
3.2. The content of the customary right to water	95
4. The obligations stemming from the human right to water	99
4.1. The nature and content of the obligations	99
4.2. The subjects responsible for their implementation	104
4.3. The territorial extension of the obligations	106
5. The role of international judges and quasi-judicial compliance mechanisms in the identification and formation of the human right to water	112
5.1. International human rights mechanisms	113
5.2. Regional human rights tribunals and compliance mechanisms	114
5.3. International investment tribunals	120
6. Conclusion	120
III. The liberalization of water services under international investment agreements and the human right to water
1. Introduction	123
2. The jurisdiction of investment tribunals to adjudicate violations of the human right to water	128
3. The impact of the human right to water on the merits of investor-State arbitration	131
3.1. The relevant BIT provisions likely to raise concerns from a human rights perspective	131
3.1.1. Expropriation	132
3.1.2. Fair and equitable treatment	134
3.1.3. Full protection and security	137
3.2. Cases lacking clear reference to the human right to water	137
3.2.1. Expropriation	143
3.2.2. Fair and equitable treatment	145
3.2.3. Full protection and security	147
3.3. Cases acknowledging the human right to water	148
3.3.1. Expropriation	155
3.3.2. Fair and equitable treatment	158
3.3.3. Full protection and security	163
3.3.4. The defence of necessity	164
3.4. Interim conclusion	165
4. The impact of the human right to water on compensation in investor-State arbitration	167
4.1. Cases lacking clear reference to the human right to water	169

	page
4.2. Cases acknowledging the human right to water	169
4.3. Interim conclusion	171
5. Harmonizing investment protection with the human right to water	171
5.1. Harmonization by means of conflict prevention	172
5.1.1. Human rights impact assessment	172
5.1.2. Revising domestic rules and stabilization clauses	174
5.1.3. Incorporating human rights considerations in IIAs	176
5.1.4. Drafting a business and human rights treaty	180
5.2. Harmonization by means of interpretation of relevant BITs provisions	182
5.3. Establishing systemic relationships of priority	186
6. The attempts to ground corporate human rights obligations	190
7. Conclusion	194
IV. The liberalization of trade in water services under the GATS and the human right to water
1. Introduction	197
2. The applicability of the GATS to water services	201
2.1. An overview of the GATS	202
2.2. The lack of specific commitments in the water sector	208
3. The compatibility between the GATS and the State's regulatory autonomy in the water services sector	214
3.1. The general GATS provisions likely to raise concern from a human right perspective	216
3.1.1. Domestic regulations	216
3.1.2. Subsidies	220
3.1.3. Monopolies and exclusive service suppliers	222
3.2. The GATS provisions on specific commitments	224
3.2.1. Market access	224
3.2.2. National treatment	226
4. Harmonizing trade in services with the human right to water	229
4.1. Harmonization by means of conflict prevention	229
4.1.1. Scheduling commitments for water services	230
4.1.2. The subordination clause in favor of measures necessary to protect human life and health	234
4.2. Harmonization by means of interpretation of GATS provisions applicable to water services	234
4.2.1. The right to regulate in the public interest and the interpretation of the GATS provisions concerning market access and national treatment	237
4.2.1.1. The interpretation of the market access clause	237
4.2.1.2. The interpretation of the national treatment clause	239

X The human right to water and international economic law

	page
4.2.2. The right to regulate in the public interest and the interpretation of the GATS provisions related to public services	242
4.2.2.1. The interpretation of the notion of services supplied in the exercise of governmental authority	244
4.2.2.2. The interpretation of the notion of government procurement for the supply of public services	247
4.2.3. Interim conclusion	251
4.3. Establishing systemic relationships of priority	252
5. Conclusion	260
Conclusions
1. Outline of the main findings and responses to the research questions	263
2. Appraisal	266
Selected Bibliography	271
Acknowledgements	275